Your Guide to Wine

Stuart Levine

Here are a couple of simple guidelines to help you maneuver your way through the confusion of pairing wine and food.

Think sauce - not the main ingredient.

When trying to pair a unique dish to a wine, don't think too hard about the basic main ingredient, think about how it will be prepared. A light Pinot Grigio with a broiled piece of salmon drizzled with olive oil may not be the best choice if you take that salmon and put a heavy cream sauce on it. A California Chardonnay would match much better with its creamy, buttery flavor.

Don't assume red is for meat and white is for fish. This has always been a big one. Once again it comes down to the preparation. A lightly seasoned beef dish with a creamy or buttery sauce might again match well with that full-bodied Chardonnay. Or, take that beef and add a savory lemon-based seasoning and a Sauvignon Blanc or Viognier might be perfect. Try serving a meaty fish, like tuna grilled with peppercorns, with a medium-bodied Tempranillo from Spain.

Poultry has always been one of the most versatile ingredients for wine. Easily paired with both red and white wine, chicken can take anything you throw at it. Try a simply roasted chicken with a Spanish Albarino or go red with a nice Pinot Noir from Oregon. Either way you can't lose.

Wine is as much about what you eat and about the company you share it with as what is in the glass. Simplify your pairing decisions and experiment to see what you like not just what you think you're supposed to match with the dish.

Stuart Levine is a member of the Society of Wine Educators and a Certified Specialist of Wine. He owns the award-winning VINO 100 wine shop in White Plains.

WHITE

#OOTD

(OUTFIT OF THE DAY)

Here at the Westchester Road Runner, we understand athletes. We understand that the perfect outfit has nothing to do with skinny jeans or italian shoes. The perfect outfit.. the one you take selfies in after your training run or while stretching at the gym is a cutting edge combination of function and form. Its colorful, full of personality but all business. And chances are.. you got it here. If not, stop in and see why we're a perennial selection as the top running store on the east coast... Since 1980.
